

CONTENTS

Introduction	5
Differentiation of common vetch (Vicia sativa L.) accessions from the Baltic Region according to the genetic singularity coefficient	7
Differentiation of common vetch (Vicia sativa L.) accessions from Belarus according to the genetic singularity coefficient	11
Differentiation of common vetch (Vicia sativa L.) accessions from Central Ukraine according to the genetic singularity coefficient	12
Differentiation of common vetch (Vicia sativa L.) accessions from Western Ukraine according to the genetic singularity coefficient	14
Differentiation of common vetch (Vicia sativa L.) accessions from the Caucasus according to the genetic singularity coefficient	16
Differentiation of common vetch (Vicia sativa L.) accessions from the Northwest Region of the Russian Federation according to the genetic singularity coefficient	19
Differentiation of common vetch (Vicia sativa L.) accessions from the Central Region of the Russian Federation according to the genetic singularity coefficient	21
Differentiation of common vetch (Vicia sativa L.) accessions from the Central Black Soil Region of the Russian Federation according to the genetic singularity coefficient.....	24
Differentiation of common vetch (Vicia sativa L.) accessions from the Volga Region and Volga-Vyatka Region of the Russian Federation according to the genetic singularity coefficient	28
Differentiation of common vetch (Vicia sativa L.) accessions from the Ural Region of the Russian Federation according to the genetic singularity coefficient	31
Differentiation of common vetch (Vicia sativa L.) accessions from Siberia and the Far East according to the genetic singularity coefficient	33
References	35
Appendix. Distribution of common vetch (Vicia sativa L.) accessions according to geographic regions, ecogeographic groups and ecotypes.....	37